

Student Break Cards

Hockey

4 Break Supports + Progress Charts

Clear Visuals for Predictable
Break Routines

TEACH STUDENTS TO ASK FOR A BREAK AND RETURN TO LEARNING

SCROLL
to take a look inside!

STUDENT BREAK CARDS

More Than Just a Card to Hand Out

When a student becomes overwhelmed, knowing how to ask for a break can be a skill we need to teach.

Teach and practice the routine—not just how to use the card.

✓ 4 Break Card Formats + Optional Progress Charts

Needing a Break Is Not a Failure

Adults ask for a moment or step away when they need space.

Some students need us to teach them how.

✓ Asking for support is a skill worth teaching.

BEFORE FRUSTRATION ESCALATES

Teach students to

- 1 Recognize when they need a break.
- 2 Show or give the card to an adult.
- 3 Follow the break routine and rejoin.

✓ Practice when calm—not only when overwhelmed.

SOMETIMES ADULTS NOTICE FIRST

Offer a visual cue when a student does not yet recognize or communicate that they need a break.

✓ Offer support—
not punishment.

Offer a
Break

Offer a Movement Break

MAKE THE BREAK ROUTINE PREDICTABLE

Teach the student what to expect before, during, and after a break.

How: Request or accept a break.

Where: Go to the agreed place.

What: Use the agreed break options.

When: Recognize when the break is ending.

Return: Rejoin with support as needed.

✓ Model and practice—not just explain.

WON'T STUDENTS USE BREAKS TO AVOID WORK?

- ★ Teach that asking works - When teaching a break request to replace escalation, initially honor each request for the agreed break. Students need to trust that asking gets them support.
- ★ Recognize progress - Several appropriately requested breaks can mean less lost learning time than a meltdown and lengthy recovery.
- ★ Build coping skills at the same time - Teach ways to handle frustration and reinforce staying with manageable tasks. As readiness grows, breaks may become shorter or happen closer to the activity.

WHEN IS THE 3-BREAK CARD APPROPRIATE?

© TheResponsiveEducator

Consider it when the student:

- Consistently requests breaks and follows the routine.
- Is developing ways to manage frustration and return to tasks.
- Has a support plan and observation data that support a planned limit.

Set a time frame that fits the student

- Three breaks per hour, half day, or full day—based on individual need.
Teach when the boxes reset.

Needed breaks remain available after all three boxes are marked.
The adult-offered card can help cue a break when a student is becoming overwhelmed.

REINFORCE THE BREAK ROUTINE

Use the optional progress charts to recognize one skill at a time.

- 1 Choose a skill, such as:
 - Asking for a break.
 - Using a coping strategy.
 - Rejoining the activity with support.

- 2 Add a sticker or mark when the student demonstrates the chosen skill.

A progress chart template with a blue border. At the top right is an illustration of a hockey player. Below it is a red-bordered box labeled "Name:". The chart consists of a 6x5 grid of squares. The first three rows are partially filled with yellow stars: the first row has 5 stars, the second row has 5 stars, and the third row has 3 stars. The bottom three rows are empty. At the bottom left is an illustration of a hockey net, and at the bottom right is an illustration of a hockey puck. The text "©The Responsive Educator" is printed at the bottom center.

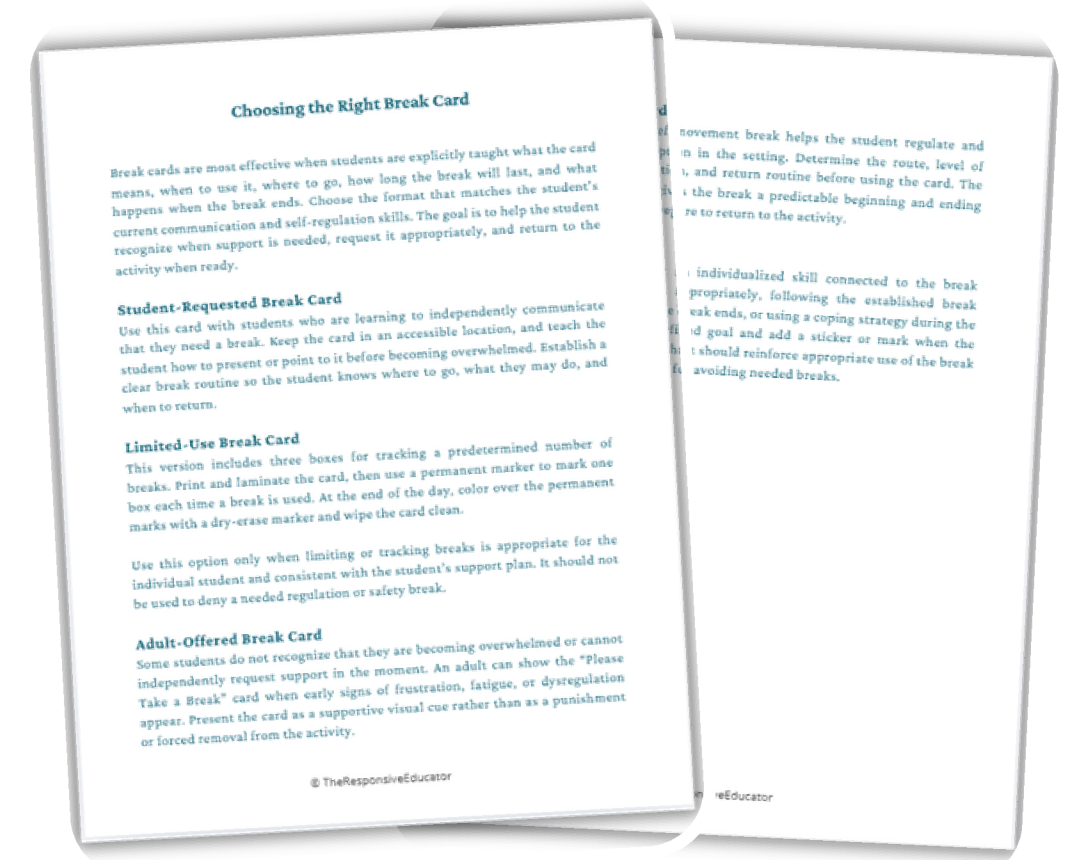

★	★	★	★	★
★	★	★	★	★
★	★	★

Recognize successful use of the routine—not going without needed breaks.

What's Included

Multiple designs for each break card type

- Student-requested break cards
- Three-box break cards
- Adult-offered break cards
- Five-minute walk cards
- Coordinating progress charts
- Directions for choosing and using the formats

Printable PDF • Not Editable • Print, Cut, and Laminate Cards