Challenging but fun

The Pastry War

One of the main reasons for the conflict between France and Mexico was Mexico's refusal to pay some debts from years before. The debts led to the first conflict between the two countries, called "the Pastry War" due to a certain baker's insistence on being reimbursed for his losses. The debts were not forgotten, and were one of the issues in the later wars.

The Pastry War

Maximilian

It's pretty weird for an Austrian noble to take the throne of Mexico, but that's exactly what happened! He did his best to rule over Mexico but made too many enemies. The end of the American civil war led to the end of Maximilian's rule over Mexico as well. He tried to keep control over the country as long as possible, but in the end he was "fired."

Emperor Maximilian

The second battle of Puebla

There was more than one battle of Puebla - the first time around, the French didn't come out on top. The second battle reversed the tide - and almost exactly one year later, France controlled Mexico.

Vive la France!
