Why Do You Need a Visual Behavior Chart?

- Behavior varies across the day
- Younger students need concrete feedback
- Detailed tracking takes too much time
- Patterns can be hard to spot without clear visual data

How Does It Work?

- Organizes the day into manageable sections
- Teacher records behavior using simple smiley face visuals, adding notes as needed.
- Provides an at-a-glance picture of the student's day

The image displays two versions of a behavior tracking form. The background shows a printed paper version, and the foreground shows a digital tablet displaying the same form. Both forms are designed for tracking student behavior throughout the day.

Form Structure:

- Student: A blank line for the student's name.
- Date: A blank line for the date.
- Positive Behavior I am working on: A blank line for the specific behavior being tracked.
- Table: A table with three columns: Task/Activity, How Did I Do?, and Notes.

Table Details:

- The Task/Activity column contains 12 empty rows for recording activities.
- The How Did I Do? column contains 12 rows, each with three smiley face icons: a happy face (smiley), a neutral face (straight line), and a sad face (frowny).
- The Notes column contains 12 empty rows for additional notes.
