Les Rangers du Jour-J

À 7 h 10 le matin du 6 juin, le bateau SS Ben My Chree est arrivé sur la côte de Normandie. Il y avait 261 soldats américains – les Rangers – quand le bateau est parti d'Angleterre. Maintenant, les soldats sont entrés dans de petits bateaux pour approcher la plage. Un bateau a coulé et les soldats sont morts. Le courant est très fort et ces petits bateaux ne sont pas arrivés à leur destination originale – ils sont arrivés à l'est.

Quand les bateaux sont enfin arrivés sur la plage, les Allemands ont commencé à tirer. Mais après 10 minutes, les soldats américains sont arrivés au bas d'une grande falaise, la Pointe de la Percée. Les soldats ont commencé à grimper la falaise. Ils sont montés sur la falaise : les Allemands tiraient les cordes et les cordes étaient mouillées. Les Rangers sont morts sous les balles des Allemands.

The "when" and the "what"

Many French tenses use a combination of a helping verb and a past participle. The passé composé is the most common of these tenses, but there are many more. Usually, the helping verb tells you WHEN something is done. The tense of the helping verb tells you when something happened. In the passé composé, we use the helping verb être for some verbs to show that the event happened in the past. The past participle tells you WHAT happened. You need both the WHEN and the WHAT to make your meaning clear. If you are missing either the helping verb or the past participle, your meaning won't be clear – so be sure you have both!

One way to make sure that you are not making mistakes by leaving out one of the two parts is to follow the simple practice of underlining the helping verb and circling the past participle in each sentence that you write in the passé composé. Once you have mastered this verb tense, you will no longer need to underline/circle, but it's a good habit to get used to looking for both parts.

| The WHEN | The WHAT |
|----------|----------|
| allé     |          |
| partis   |          |
| arrivé   |          |
| venue    |          |

Each of the sentences below.

“This is OUTSTANDING! I can’t wait to add your “grammar snacks” to my “grammar bites” menu for my upper levels needing review on specific topics (and I can’t wait to stock up on the others you have on offer!)”
